MAY 02, 2025 | VIRTUAL CONFERENCE

Yuri Hirayama, School Director, Principal Educator, and Chief Sustainability Officer of the Yuri Education Center, leads a transformative model of education that places women's empowerment and youth leadership at its core. With a strong belief that education can be a driving force for global change, she integrates sustainability, gender equality, and cultural heritage into her programs to nurture conscious, future-ready leaders. Her initiatives, including "Yuria's Happy English" provide meaningful opportunities for women, particularly mothers, to build both language and life skills while engaging with global sustainability goals and strengthening their sense of community.

A central element of Yuri's educational approach is the conviction that empowering women leads to stronger and more resilient communities. Through inclusive learning spaces and leadership-focused projects such as "You Lead" and "Waste to Wow!" and intercultural discussions on balancing innovation with tradition, she supports female learners in developing confidence, empathy, and a clear sense of purpose. She views the solitude that can come with leadership as an opportunity for reflection and creative thinking, and encourages collaboration across cultures to generate impactful, community-based solutions.

Yuri's leadership is rooted in compassion, adaptability, and a commitment to long-term, global impact. By combining innovative teaching methods with cultural awareness and sustainability, she fosters an environment where women are seen as capable leaders and active agents of change. Her vision is to prepare a generation of informed, resilient women who can lead with integrity, preserve cultural values, and contribute meaningfully to building a more inclusive and sustainable future.
